Hello there, I'm Javier, best known as Nano!

Wondering about hire me for some project? Cool! That's not a bad idea. But, Why? Well, let me tell you why.

I'm the guy that likes to study every day, I like to solve problems and sure, I'm aware that the problems sometimes are bigger than me, but I don't care. I think obstacles are a normal part of life and to shoot them down depends completely on your wits.

Me, a little more in depth.

I belong to those who believe in the self learning. The world of technology is vertiginous, something new appears every day, and I know that is impossible to cover all that stuff, but in my line of work I'm always up to date with new trends; I never leave aside the opportunity to learn about something new. I must say also that recently I'm getting into the world of UI/UX and design, these are not my specifics fields but I started experimenting actively with this.

Whenever I don't know something about anything, I just go ahead and try to learn... "Just google it" as they say. I feel the necessity to learn. I love what I do, no matter if sometimes is hard, it captivates me.

A little bit more.

Sure, there is more to say about me!

I'm characterized by my ability to join a team, i'm that guy that are always trying to be cool with the other people, I'm always trying to help in everything if I can, no matter what... I like to help.

GNU/Linux is my default system, Ubuntu to be more specific. I'm about 8 years using Linux, I love it and I think that is the coolest O.S. in the world (just because it fulfills my needs very well). I love the sensation when I say "I can manipulate my system as I want, whenever I want". Also the GNU/Linux world has made me win a lot of good friends and experiences over the years so I'm fond and grateful (in a certain way) to the community as a whole.

See you around!